

Call for Voice

The International Conference "Processes of Inclusion, valorization of differences and contrast against discriminations within University contexts: Normative methods, theoretical perspectives and good practices to redefine the Academic system".

Organised by the Athenaum Center SInAPSi of Università degli Studi di Napoli Federico II, it represents the final venture achieved within the European three-year Project "XENIA: He Inclusiveness Index".

The project, wich has seen the participation of 7 European partners from 5 different Countries, has led to the realization of an index of measurement of inclusion levels of women and sexual minorities within academic contexts.

The final conference of projet "XENIA" represents a moment to share the results and consideration within the scientific community and the all crowd.

The Call For Voice "The inclusion I would have" addresses the whole academic community of students who wants to share reflections and experiences regarding discriminations linked to genre identities and sexual orientation at University.

The section is open to students who have the desire of expressing alternative forms regarding the theme of inclusion utilizing alternative forms of Communication (Slogans, Social Campaign, Digital productions...).

The works can be delivered within November 20th filling in the specific form scanning the QR code.

From an environmentally sustainable perspective, the works will be insert within a unique multimedial product which will be displayed during the day.

Participation in the conference is free of charge. LIS service, simultaneous translation service, streaming service will be available.

Participation to the conference is free-entry.
